Chapter 1

Introduction

If you were at all paying attention in pre-college science classes, you have probably seen this equation:

$$d = rt \text{ or } \text{distance} = \text{rate} * \text{time}$$

In English, that says we can know how far something has travelled if we know how fast it's going and for how long. If we multiply the rate by the time, we'll get the distance.

If you remember just a bit about algebra, you know we can move these things around. If we know two of them, we can figure out the third. So, for instance, if we know the distance and we know the time, we can use algebra to divide the distance by the time to get the rate.

$$d/t = r \text{ or } \text{distance}/\text{time} = \text{rate}$$

In 2012, the South Florida Sun Sentinel found a story in this formula.

People were dying on South Florida tollways in terrible car accidents. What made these different from other car fatal car accidents that happen every day in the US? Police officers driving way too fast were causing them.

But do police regularly speed on tollways or were there just a few random and fatal exceptions?

Thanks to Florida's public records laws, the Sun Sentinel got records from the toll transponders in police cars in south Florida. The transponders recorded when a car went through a given place. And then it would do it again. And again.

Given that those places are fixed – they're toll plazas – and they had the time it took to go from one toll plaza to another, they had the distance and the time.

It took high school algebra to find how fast police officers were driving. And the results were shocking.

Twenty percent of police officers had exceeded 90 miles per hour on toll roads. In a 13-month period, officers drove between 90 and 110 mph more than 5,000 times. And these were just instances found on toll roads. Not all roads have tolls.

The story was a stunning find, and the newspaper documented case after case of police officers violating the law and escaping punishment. And, in 2013, they won the Pulitzer Prize for Public Service.

All with simple high school algebra.

1.1 Modern data journalism

It's a single word in a single job description, but a BuzzFeed job posting in 2017 is another indicator in what could be a profound shift in how data journalism is both practiced and taught.

"We're looking for someone with a passion for news and a commitment to using data to find amazing, important stories — both quick hits and deeper analyses that drive conversations," the posting seeking a data journalist says. It goes on to list five things BuzzFeed is looking for: Excellent collaborator, clear writer, deep statistical understanding, knowledge of obtaining and restructuring data.

And then there's this:

This is not the data journalism of 20 years ago. When it started, it was a small group of people in newsrooms using spreadsheets and databases. Data journalism now encompasses programming for all kinds of purposes, product development, user interface design, data visualization and graphics on top of more traditional skills like analyzing data and writing stories.

In this book, you'll get a taste of modern data journalism through programming in R, a statistics language. You'll be challenged to think programmatically while thinking about a story you can tell to readers in a way that they'll want to read. They might seem like two different sides of the brain — mutually exclusive skills. They aren't. I'm confident you'll see programming is a creative endeavor and storytelling can be analytical.

Combining them together has the power to change policy, expose injustice and deeply inform.

1.2 Installations

This book is all in the R statistical language. To follow along, you'll do the following:

1. Install the R language on your computer. Go to the R Project website, click download R and select a mirror closest to your location. Then download the version for your computer.
2. Install R Studio Desktop. The free version is great.

Going forward, you'll see passages like this:

```
install.packages("tidyverse")
```

That is code that you'll need to run in your R Studio. When you see that, you'll know what to do.

1.3 About this book

This book is the collection of class materials for the author's Data Journalism class at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln's College of Journalism and Mass Communications. There's some things you should know about it:

- It is free for students.
- The topics will remain the same but the text is going to be constantly tinkered with.
- What is the work of the author is copyright Matt Waite 2020.
- The text is Attribution-NonCommercial-ShareAlike 4.0 International Creative Commons licensed. That means you can share it and change it, but only if you share your changes with the same license and it cannot be used for commercial purposes. I'm not making money on this so you can't either.
- As such, the whole book – authored in Bookdown – is open sourced on Github. Pull requests welcomed!

1.4 What we'll cover

- Public records and open data
- R Basics
- Replication
- Data basics and structures
- Aggregates
- Mutating
- Working with dates
- Filters

- Data smells
- Cleaning data I
- Cleaning data II
- Pulling data from PDFs
- Advanced analysis: Correlations and regressions
- Advanced analysis: Logistic regression
- Basic data scraping
- Intermediate data scraping
- Getting data from APIs: Census
- Visualizing for reporting: Basics
- Visualizing for reporting: More forms
- Visualizing for reporting: Faceting
- Geographic data basics
- Geographic queries
- Geographic visualization
- Text analysis basics
- Text analysis
- Writing with and about data
- Data journalism ethics

Chapter 2

Public records

Public records are the lifeblood of investigative reporting. They carry their own philosophical framework, in a manner of speaking.

- Sunlight is the best disinfectant. Corruption hides in the shadows.
- You paid for it with your taxes. It should be yours (with exceptions).
- Journalism with a capital J is about holding the powerful accountable for their actions.

Keeping those things in mind as you navigate public records is helpful.

2.1 Federal law

Your access to public records and public meetings is a matter of the law. As a journalist, it is your job to know this law better than most lawyers. Which law applies depends on which branch of government you are asking.

The Federal Government is covered by the Freedom of Information Act, or FOIA. FOIA is not a universal term. Do not use it if you are not talking to a federal agency. FOIA is a beacon of openness to the world. FOIA is deeply flawed and frustrating.

Why?

- There is no real timetable with FOIA. Requests can take months, even years.
- As a journalist, you can ask that your request be expedited.
- Guess what? That requires review. More delays.
- Exemptions are broad. National security, personal privacy, often overused.
- Denied? You can appeal. More delays.

The law was enacted in 1966, but it's still poorly understood by most federal employees, if not outright flouted by political appointees. Lawsuits are common.

Post 9/11, the Bush administration rolled back many agency rules. Obama ordered a “presumption of openness” but followed it with some of the most restrictive policies ever seen. The Trump Administration, similar to the Obama administration, claims to be the most transparent administration, but has steadily removed records from open access and broadly denied access to records.

Result? FOIA is in trouble.

SPJ is a good resource.

2.2 State law

States are – generally – more open than the federal government. The distance between the government and the governed is smaller. Some states, like Florida and Texas, are very open. Others, like Virginia and Pennsylvania, are not.

Nebraska? Somewhere in the middle. Better than some, worse than others.

Under Nebraska law:

- You are entitled to see and copy public records.
- They can charge you a fee for those copies.
- They do not have to give you records in a format different from what they keep them in.

With a written request, Nebraska public officials have four days to respond. If Nebraska public officials deny your request, they must do so in writing specifying their reasons. If it will take more than four days, they must tell you, in writing, why and how long it will take.

The Reporters Committee For Freedom of the Press is a good resource.

Please and thank you will get you more records than any lawyer or well written request. When requesting data, you are going to scare the press office and you are going to confuse the agency lawyer. Request to have their data person on the phone.

Be. Nice.

Hunting for records is like any other kind of reporting – you have to do research. You have to ask questions. What records do you keep? For how long?

A good source of info? Records retention schedules, often required by law or administrative rule at an agency. Nebraska’s is particularly good.

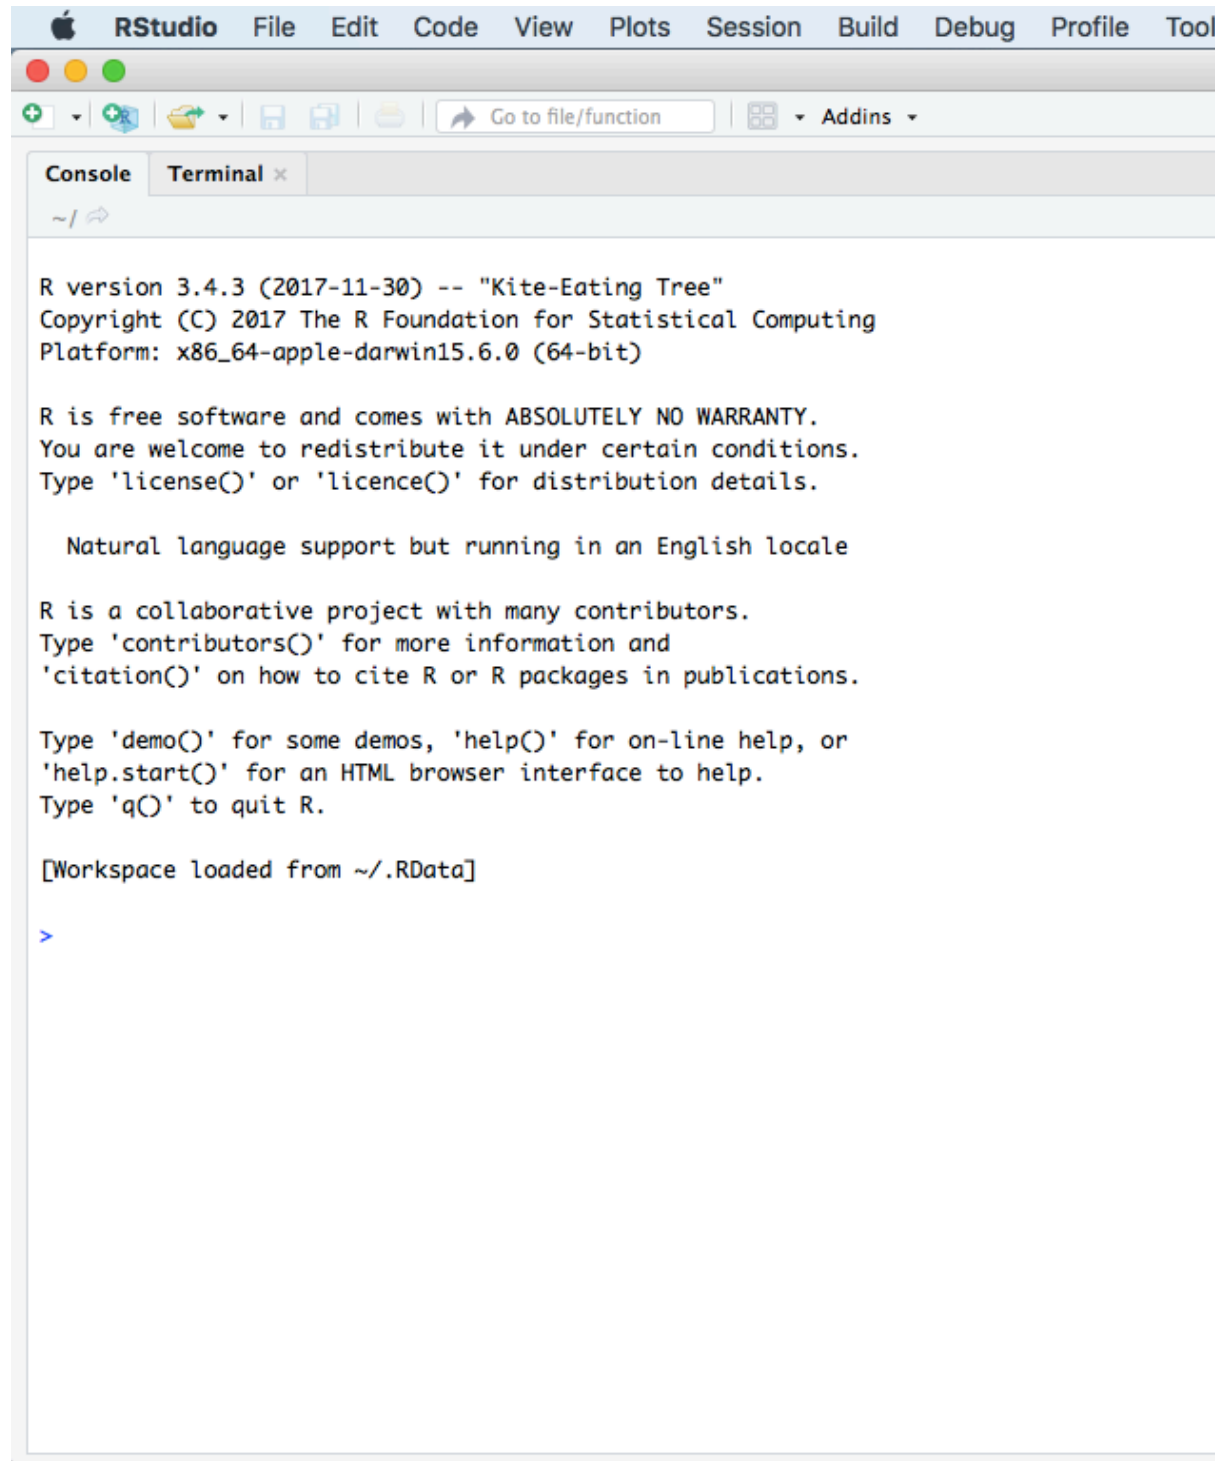

For an example, let’s say we wanted to look at nursing homes in Nebraska, because they’re closing down quickly. If we just wanted a data set of licensed nursing homes in the state, our options online are ... not good. The Department of Health and Human Services publishes a list online, but it’s a horribly formatted PDF.

But what does the agency keep? Looking at DHHS's public health departments records retention schedule, you'll find a lot more. And that opens doors for public records requests.

Chapter 3

R basics

R is a programming language, one specifically geared toward statistical analysis. Like all programming languages, it has certain built-in functions and you can interact with it in multiple ways. The first, and most basic, is the console.

Think of the console like talking directly to R. It's direct, but it has some drawbacks and some quirks we'll get into later. For now, try typing this into the console and hit enter:

2+2
```

```
[1] 4

Congrats, you've run some code. It's not very complex, and you knew the answer before hand, but you get the idea. We can compute things. We can also store things. In programming languages, these are called variables. We can assign things to variables using `<-`. And then we can do things with them. The `<-` is called an assignment operator.

Try this in your console.

number <- 2
```

```
number * number
```

```
[1] 4

Now assign a different number to the variable `number`. Try run `number * number` again. Get what you expected?

We can have as many variables as we can name. We can even reuse them (but be careful you know you're doing that or you'll introduce errors). Try this in your console.

```
firstnumber <- 1
```

```
secondnumber <- 2
```

```
(firstnumber + secondnumber) * secondnumber
```

```
[1] 6
```

We can store anything in a variable. A whole table. An array of numbers. A single word. A whole book. All the books of the 18th century. They're really powerful. We'll explore them at length.

3.1 Adding libraries, part 1

The real strength of any given programming language is the external libraries that power it. The base language can do a lot, but it's the external libraries that solve many specific problems – even making the base language easier to use.

For this class, we're going to need several external libraries.

The first library we're going to use is called Swirl. So in the console, type `install.packages('swirl')` and hit enter. That installs swirl.

Now, to use the library, type `library(swirl)` and hit enter. That loads swirl. Then type `swirl()` and hit enter. Now you're running swirl. Follow the directions on the screen. When you are asked, you want to install course 1 R Programming: The basics of programming in R. Then, when asked, you want to do option 1, R Programming, in that course.

When you are finished with the course – it will take just a few minutes – type 0 to exit (it will not be clear that's what you do when you are done).

3.2 Adding libraries, part 2

We'll mostly use two libraries for analysis – `dplyr` and `ggplot2`. To get them, and several other useful libraries, we can install a single collection of libraries called the tidyverse. Type this into your console: `install.packages('tidyverse')`

NOTE: This is a pattern. You should always install libraries in the console.

Then, to help us with learning and replication, we're going to use R Notebooks. So we need to install that library. Type this into your console: `install.packages('rmarkdown')`

Chapter 4

Data journalism in the age of replication

It's a single word in a single job description, but a BuzzFeed job posting in 2017 is another indicator in what could be a profound shift in how data journalism is both practiced and taught.

“We’re looking for someone with a passion for news and a commitment to using data to find amazing, important stories — both quick hits and deeper analyses that drive conversations,” the posting seeking a data journalist says. It goes on to list five things BuzzFeed is looking for: Excellent collaborator, clear writer, deep statistical understanding, knowledge of obtaining and restructuring data.

And then there’s this:

“You should have a strong command of at least one toolset that (a) allows for filtering, joining, pivoting, and aggregating tabular data, and (b) enables reproducible workflows.”

The word you’re seeing more and more of? Reproducible. And it started in earnest this summer when data journalism crossed a major threshold in American journalism: It now has its own section in the Associated Press Stylebook.

“Data journalism has become a staple of reporting across beats and platforms,” the Data Journalism section of the Stylebook opens. “The ability to analyze quantitative information and present conclusions in an engaging and accurate way is no longer the domain of specialists alone.”

The AP’s Data Journalism section discusses how to request data and in what format, guidelines for scraping data from websites with automation, the ethics of using leaked or hacked data and other topics long part of data journalism conference talks.

But the third page of the section contains perhaps the most profound commandment: “As a general rule, all assertions in a story based on data analysis should be reproducible. The methodology description in the story or accompanying materials should provide a road map to replicate the analysis.”

Reproducible research – replication – is a cornerstone of scientific inquiry. Researchers across a range of academic disciplines use methods to find new knowledge and publish it in peer reviewed journals. And, when it works, other researchers take that knowledge and try it with their own samples in their own locations. Replication studies exist to take something from an Interesting Finding to a Theory and beyond.

It doesn’t always work.

Replication studies aren’t funded at nearly the level as new research. And, to the alarm of many, scores of studies can’t be replicated by others. Researchers across disciplines are finding that when their original studies are replicated, flaws are found, or the effects found aren’t as strong as the original. Because of this, academics across a number of disciplines have written about a replication crisis in their respective fields, particularly psychology, social science and medical research.

In Chapter 1 of the New Precision Journalism, Phil Meyer wrote that “we journalists would be wrong less often if we adapted to our own use some of the research tools of the social scientists.”

Meyer would go on to write about how computers pouring over datasets too large to crunch by hand had changed social science from a discipline with “a few data and a lot of interpretation” into a much more meaningful and powerful area of study. If journalists could become comfortable with data and some basic statistics, they too could harness this power.

“It used to be said that journalism is history in a hurry,” Meyer wrote. “The argument of this book is that to cope with the acceleration of social change in today’s world, journalism must become social science in a hurry.”

He wrote that in 1971. It might as well have been yesterday.

Journalism doesn’t have a history of replication, but the concerns about credibility are substantially greater. Trust in media is at an all time low and shows no signs of improving. While the politics of the day have quite a bit to do with this mistrust of media, being more transparent about what journalists do can’t hurt.

The AP’s commandment that Thou Must Replicate Your Findings could, if taken seriously by the news business, have substantial impacts on how data journalism gets done in newsrooms and how data journalism gets taught, both at professional conferences and universities.

How? Two ways.

- The predominant way that data journalism gets done in a newsroom is through simple tools like Microsoft Excel or Google Sheets. Those simple tools, on their own, lack significant logging functions, meaning journalists will have to maintain detailed logs of what they did so any analysis can be replicated.
- The predominant way that data journalism gets taught – both in professional settings and at most universities – doesn’t deal with replication at all. The tools and the training stress Getting Things Done – an entirely logical focus for a deadline driven business. The choices of tools – like spreadsheets – are made to get from data to story as quick as possible, without frightening away math and tech phobic students.

If the AP’s replication rules are to be followed, journalism needs to become much more serious about the tools and techniques used to do data journalism. The days of Point and Click tools to do Quick and Dirty analysis that get published are dying. The days of formal methods using documented steps are here.

4.1 The stylebook

Troy Thibodeaux, the editor of the AP’s data journalism team, said the stylebook entry started when the data team found themselves answering the same questions over and over. With a grant from the Knight Foundation, the team began to document their own standards and turn that into a stylebook section.

From the beginning, they had a fairly clear idea of what they wanted to do – think through a project and ask what the frequently asked questions are that came up. It was not going to be a soup-to-nuts guide to how to do a data project.

When the section came out, eyebrows went up on the replication parts, surprising Thibodeaux.

“From our perspective, this is a core value for us,” he said. “Just for our own benefit, we need to be able to have someone give us a second set of eyes. We benefit from that every day. We catch things for each other.”

Thibodeaux said the AP data team has two audiences when it comes to replication – they have the readers of the work, and members of the collective who may want to do their own work with the data.

“This is something that’s essential to the way we work,” he said. “And it’s important in terms of transparency and credibility going forward. We thought it would be kind of unexceptionable.”

4.2 Replication

Meyer, now 86, said he's delighted to see replication up for discussion now, but warned that we shouldn't take it too far.

"Making the analysis replicable was something I worried about from the very beginning," he wrote in an email. So much so that in 1967, after publishing stories from his landmark survey after the Detroit riots, he shipped the data and backup materials about it to a social science data repository at the University of North Carolina.

And, in doing so, he opened the door to others replicating his results. One scholar attempted to find fault with Meyer's analysis by slicing the data ever thinner until the differences weren't significant – gaming the analysis to criticize the stories.

Meyer believes replication is vitally important, but doesn't believe it should take on the trappings of science replication, where newsrooms take their own samples or re-survey a community. That would be prohibitively expensive.

But journalists should be sharing their data and analysis steps. And it doesn't need to be complicated, he said.

"Replication is a theoretical standard, not a requirement that every investigator duplicate his or her own work for every project," he said. "Giving enough information in the report to enable another investigator to follow in your footsteps is enough. Just telling enough to make replication possible will build confidence."

But as simple as that sounds, it's not so simple. Ask social scientists.

Andrew Gelman, a professor of statistics and political science and director of the Applied Statistics Center at Columbia University, wrote in the journal CHANCE in February that difficulties with replication in empirical research are pervasive.

"When an outsider requests data from a published paper, the authors will typically not post or send their data files and code, but instead will point to their sources, so replicators have to figure out exactly what to do from there," Gelman wrote. "End-to-end replicability is not the norm, even among scholars who actively advocate for the principles of open science."

So goes science, so goes journalism.

Until a recent set of exceptions, journalists rarely shared data. The "nerd box" – a sidebar story that explains how a news organization did what they did – is a term that first appeared on NICAR-L, a email listserv of data journalists, in the 1990s.

It was a form born in print.

As newsrooms adapted to the internet, some news organizations began linking to their data sources if they were online. Often, the data used in stories were obtained through records requests. Sometimes, reporters created the data themselves.

Journalism, more explicitly than science, is a competitive business. There have been arguments that nerd boxes and downloadable links give too much away to competitors.

Enter the AP Stylebook.

The AP Stylebook argues explicitly for both internal and external replication. Externally, they argue that the “methodology description in the story or accompanying materials should provide a road map to replicate the analysis”, meaning someone else could do the replication post publication.

Internally, the AP Stylebook says: “If at all possible, an editor or another reporter should attempt to reproduce the results of the analysis and confirm all findings before publication.”

There are two problems here.

First is that journalism, unlike science, has no history of replication. There is no Scientific Method for stories. There is no Research Methods class taught at every journalism school, at least not where it comes to writing stories. And, beyond that, journalism school isn't a requirement to get into the news business. In other words, journalism lacks the standards other disciplines have.

The second problem is, in many ways, worse: Except for the largest newsrooms, most news organizations lack editors who could replicate the analysis. Many don't have a second person who would know what to do.

Not having a second set of eyes in a newsroom is a problem, Thibodeaux acknowledges. Having a data journalism team “is an incredible luxury” at the AP, he said, and their rule is nothing goes on the wire without a second set of eyes.

Thibodeaux, for his part, wants to see fewer “lone nerds in the corner” – it's too much pressure. That person gets too much credibility from people who don't understand what they do, and they get too much blame when a mistake is made.

So what would replication look like in a newsroom? What does this mean for how newsrooms do data journalism on deadline? And what does this mean for how data journalism is being taught, particularly at a time when only half of accredited journalism programs teach any data journalism at all?

Are we walking ourselves into our own replication crisis?

4.3 Goodbye Excel?

For decades, Excel has been the gateway drug for data journalists, the Swiss Army knife of data tools, the One Tool You Can't Live Without. Investigative Reporters and Editors, an organization that trains investigative journalists, have built large amounts of their curricula around Excel. Of the journalism schools that teach data journalism, most of them begin and end with spreadsheets.

The Stylebook says at a minimum, today’s data journalists should keep a log that details:

- The source of the data, making sure to work on a copy of the data and not the original file.
- Data dictionaries or any other supporting documentation of the data.
- “Description of all steps required to transform the data and perform the analysis.”

The trouble with Excel is, unless you are keeping meticulous notes on what steps you are taking, there’s no way to keep track. Many data journalists will copy and paste the values of a formula over the formula itself to prevent Excel from fouling up cell references when moving data around – a practical step that also cuts off another path to being able to replicate the results.

An increasing number of data journalists are switching to tools like analysis notebooks, which use languages like Python and R, to document their work. The notebooks, generally speaking, allow a data journalist to mix code and explanation in the same document.

Combined with online sharing tools like GitHub, analysis notebooks seem to solve the problem of replication. But the number using them is small compared to those using spreadsheets. Recent examples of news organizations using analysis notebooks include the Los Angeles Times, the New York Times, FiveThirtyEight, and BuzzFeed.

Peter Aldous, a data journalist at BuzzFeed recently published a story about how the online news site used machine learning to find airplanes being used to spy on people in American cities. Published with the story is the code Aldous used to build his case.

“I think of it this way: As a journalist, I don’t like to simply trust what people tell me. Sometimes sources lie. Sometimes they’re just mistaken. So I like to verify what I’m told,” he wrote in an email. “By the same token, why should someone reading one of my articles believe my conclusions, if I don’t provide the evidence that explains how I reached them?”

The methodology document, associated code and source data took Aldous a few hours to create. The story, from the initial data work through the reporting required to make sense of it all, took a year. Aldous said there wasn’t a discussion about if the methodology would be published because it was assumed – “it’s written into our DNA at BuzzFeed News.”

“My background is in science journalism, and before that (way back in the 1980s) in science,” Aldous said. “In science, there’s been a shift from descriptive methods sections to publishing data and analysis code for reproducible research. And I think we’re seeing a similar shift in data journalism. Simply saying what you’ve done is not as powerful as providing the means for others to repeat and build on your work.”

Thibodeaux said that what BuzzFeed and others do with analysis notebooks and code repositories that include their data is “lovely.”

“That to me is the shining city on the hill,” Thibodeaux said. “We’re not going to get there, and I don’t think we have to for every story and every use case, and I don’t think it’s necessarily practical for every person working with data to get to that point.”

There’s a wide spectrum of approaches that still gets journalists to the essence of what the stylebook is trying to do, Thibodeaux said. There are many tools, many strategies, and the AP isn’t going to advocate for any single one of them, he said. They’re just arguing for transparency and replicability, even if that means doing more work.

“There’s a certain burden that comes with transparency,” he said. “And I think we have to accept that burden.”

The question, Thibodeaux said, is what is sufficient? What’s enough transparency? What does someone need for replicability?

“Maybe we do have to set a higher standard – the more critical the analysis is to the story, and the more complex that analysis is, that’s going to push the bar on what is a sufficient methodology statement,” he said. “And it could end up being a whole code repo in order to just say, this isn’t black magic, here’s how we got it if you’re so interested.”

4.4 “Receptivity ... is high”

Though written almost half a century ago, Meyer foresaw how data journalism was going to arrive in the newsroom.

“For the new methods to gain currency in journalism, two things must happen,” he wrote. “Editors must feel the need strongly enough to develop the in-house capacity for systematic research ... The second need, of course, is for the editors to be able to find the talent to fill this need.”

Meyer optimistically wrote that journalism schools were prepared to provide that talent – they were not then, and only small handful are now – but students were unlikely to be drawn to these new skills if they didn’t see a chance to use those skills in their careers.

It’s taken 45 years, but we are now at this point.

“The potential for receptivity, especially among the younger generation of newspaper managers, is high,” Meyer wrote.

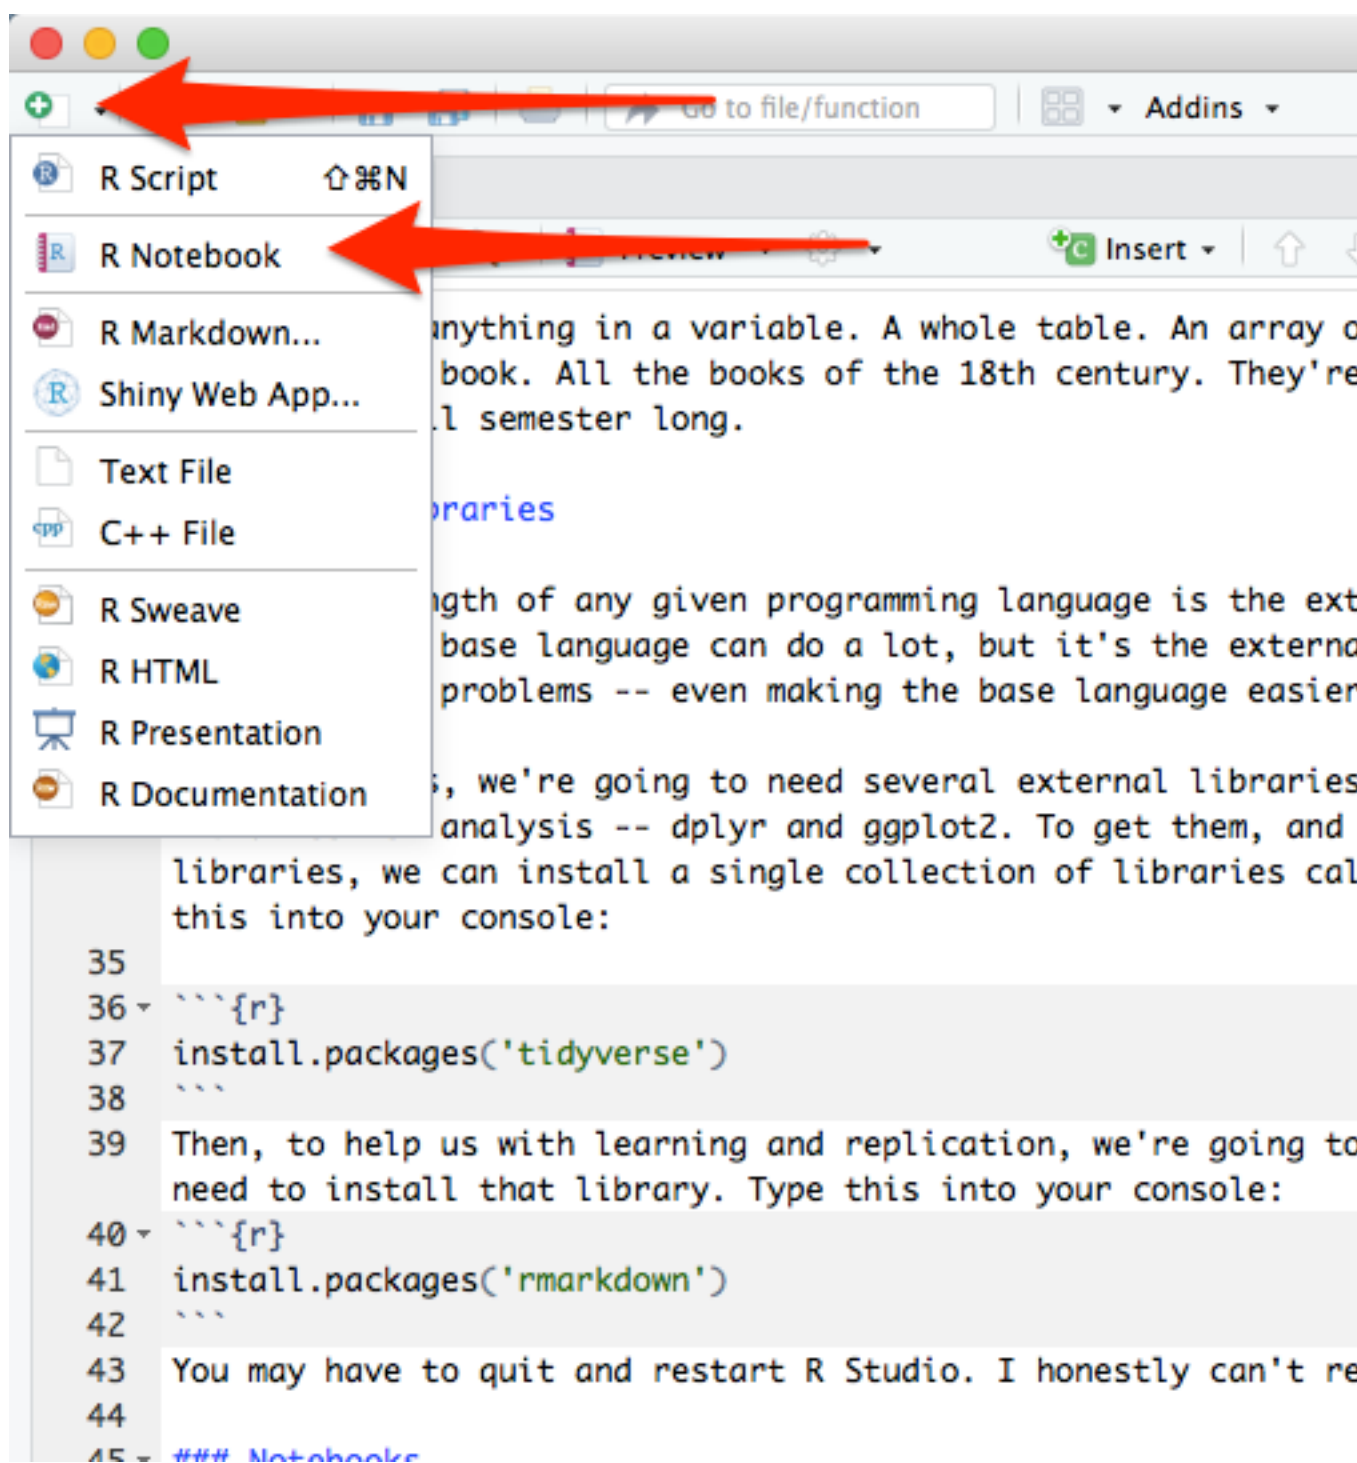

4.5 Replication in notebooks

For our purposes in this book, replication requires two things from you, the student: What and why. What is this piece of code doing, and why are you doing that here and now? What lead you to this place? That you can copy and paste code from this book or the internet is not impressive. What is necessary for learning is that you know what a piece of code is doing a thing and why you want to do that thing here.

In an R Notebook, there are two blocks: A block that uses markdown, which has no special notation, and a code block. The code blocks can run multiple languages inside R Studio, including Python, a general purpose scripting language; and SQL, or Structured Query Language, the language of databases.

For the rest of the class, we're going to be working in notebooks. In notebooks, you will both run your code and explain each step, much as I am doing here.

To start a notebook, you click on the green plus in the top left corner and go down to R Notebook. Do that now.

You will see that the notebook adds a lot of text for you. It tells you how to work in notebooks – and you should read it. The most important parts are these:

To add text, simply type. To add code you can click on the Insert button on the toolbar or by pressing Cmd+Option+I on Mac or Ctl+Alt+I on Windows.

Highlight all that text and delete it. You should have a blank document. This document is called a R Markdown file – it’s a special form of text, one that you can style, and one you can include R in the middle of it. Markdown is a simple markup format that you can use to create documents. So first things first, let’s give our notebook a big headline. Add this:

My awesome notebook

Now, under that, without any markup, just type This is my awesome notebook.

Under that, you can make text bold by writing It is really awesome.

If you want it italics, just do this on the next line: No, it's really awesome. I swear.

To see what it looks like without the markup, click the Preview or Knit button in the toolbar. That will turn your notebook into a webpage, with the formatting included.

Throughout this book, we’re going to use this markdown to explain what we are doing and, more importantly, why we are doing it. Explaining your thinking is a vital part of understanding what you are doing.

That explanation, plus the code, is the real power of notebooks. To add a block of code, follow the instructions from above: click on the Insert button on the toolbar or by pressing Cmd+Option+I on Mac or Ctl+Alt+I on Windows.

In that window, use some of the code from above and add two numbers together. To see it run, click the green triangle on the right. That runs the chunk. You should see the answer to your addition problem.

And that, just that, is the foundation you need to start this book.

Chapter 5

Data, structures and types

Data are everywhere (and data is plural of datum, thus the use of are in that statement). It surrounds you. Every time you use your phone, you are creating data. Lots of it. Your online life. Any time you buy something. It's everywhere. News, like life, is no different. Modernity is drowning in data, and more comes along all the time.

In news, and in this class, we'll be dealing largely with two kinds of data: event level data and summary data. It's not hard to envision event level data. A car accident. A crime. A fire. They are the events that make up the whole. Combine them together – summarize them – and you'll have some notion of how the year went. What we usually see is summary data – who wants to scroll through 365 days of crime data to figure out if crime was up or down?

To start with, we need to understand the shape of data.

5.1 Rows and columns

Data, oversimplifying it a bit, is information organized. Generally speaking, it's organized into rows and columns. Rows, generally, are individual elements. A crime. A county. An accident. Columns, generally, are components of the data, sometimes called variables. So if each row is a crime, the first column might be the type. The second is the date and time. The third is the location. And so on.

One of the critical components of data analysis, especially for beginners, is having a mental picture of your data. What does each row mean? What does each column in each row signify? How many rows do you have? How many columns?

EXERCISE: I love orange Skittles. What are my chances of getting more orange Skittles than other colors in a fun sized packet? Each person in the class must track their package and everyone else using a spreadsheet. What differences between sheets emerge? What similarities?

5.2 Types

There are scores of data types in the world, and R has them. In this class, we're primarily going to be dealing with data frames, and each element of our data frames will have a data type.

Typically, they'll be one of four types of data:

- Numeric: a number, like the number of car accidents in a year or the number of journalism majors.
- Character: Text, like a name, a county, a state.
- Date: Fully formed dates – 2019-01-01 – have a special date type. Elements of a date, like a year (ex. 2019) are not technically dates, so they'll appear as numeric data types.
- Logical: Rare(ish), but every now and then we'll have a data type that's Yes or No, True or False, etc.

Question: Is a zip code a number? Is a jersey number a number? Trick question, because the answer is no. Numbers are things we do math on. If the thing you want is not something you're going to do math on – can you add two phone numbers together? – then make it a character type. If you don't, most every software system on the planet will drop leading zeros. For example, every zip code in Boston starts with 0. If you record that as a number, your zip code will become a four digit number, which isn't a zip code anymore.

5.3 A simple way to get data

The hardest part of doing data journalism is often getting the data. In news, there's scores of organizations and agencies collecting data, and zero standards on how it's being collected.

If we're lucky – huge IF in news – the data we want is in a downloadable format. If we're a little less lucky, there's a way to get the data on the web. And maybe that data is in a simple table. If so, we can pull that data directly into Google Sheets.

The Lincoln Police Department publishes a daily summary of calls. Some days – like when it snows – that data becomes news. So let’s pretend that it snowed today and we need to see how many accidents the Lincoln Police responded to and what percentage of their call load that represents.

Open a browser and go to the LPD’s log page. Now, in a new tab, log into Google Docs/Drive and open a new spreadsheet. In the first cell of the first row, copy and paste this formula in:

=importHTML("http://cjis.lincoln.ne.gov/~lpd/cfstoday.htm","table",1)

This is function, with three inputs. The function is `importHTML` and the three inputs in order are the url of the page, the HTML tag we’re after (a tag in our case) and the number of the tag you’re after. So our function says go to the LPD page and get the first table tag you find. Fortunately for us, there’s only one.

If your version worked right, you’ve got the data from that page in a spreadsheet.

5.4 Cleaning the data

The first thing we need to do is recognize that we don’t have data, really. We have the results of a formula. You can tell by putting your cursor on that field, where you’ll see the formula again. This is where you’d look:

	A	B	C	D
1	Type of Call	Number
2	CANCELLED BE	5
3	03000 - ACCIDE	4
4	04000 - FALSE A	4
5	05000 - ASSAUL	1
6	08000 - WEAPO	1
7	12000 - DISTUR	5
8	13000 - DOMES	3
9	14000 - ALCOHC	2
10	16000 - FIRE	1
11	24000 - MISC.	3

The solution is easy:

Edit > Select All or type command/control A Edit > Copy or type command/control C Edit > Paste Special > Values Only or type command/control shift V

You can verify that it worked by looking in that same row 1 column A, where you'll see the formula is gone.

Untitled spreadsheet

File Edit View Insert Format Data Tools

100% $ % .0 .00 123

fx → Type of Call

	A	B	C
1	Type of Call	Number
2	CANCELLED BE	5
3	03000 - ACCIDE	4
4	04000 - FALSE A	4
5	05000 - ASSAUL	1
6	08000 - WEAPO	1
7	12000 - DISTUR	5
8	13000 - DOMES	3
9	14000 - ALCOHO	2
10	16000 - FIRE	1
11	24000 - MISC.	3
12	27000 - NARCO	5

Now you have data, but look closely. At the bottom of the data, you have the total number of calls. More often than not, and particularly the deeper into this book we go, you want to delete that. So click on the number next to that Total Calls line to highlight it and go up to Edit > Delete Row XX where XX is the row number.

After you've done that, you can export it for use in R. Go to File > Download as > Comma Separated Values.

Chapter 6

Aggregates

R is a statistical programming language that is purpose built for data analysis.

Base R does a lot, but there are a mountain of external libraries that do things to make R better/easier/more fully featured. We already installed the tidyverse – or you should have if you followed the instructions for the last assignment – which isn’t exactly a library, but a collection of libraries. Together, they make up the tidyverse. Individually, they are extraordinarily useful for what they do. We can load them all at once using the tidyverse name, or we can load them individually. Let’s start with individually.

The two libraries we are going to need for this assignment are readr and dplyr. The library readr reads different types of data in. For this assignment, we’re going to read in csv data or Comma Separated Values data. That’s data that has a comma between each column of data.

Then we’re going to use dplyr to analyze it.

To use a library, you need to import it. Good practice – one I’m going to insist on – is that you put all your library steps at the top of your notebooks.

That code looks like this:

```
library(readr)
```

To load them both, you need to do this:

```
library(readr)
library(dplyr)
```

But, because those two libraries – and several others that we’re going to use over the course of this class – are so commonly used, there’s a shortcut to loading all of the libraries we’ll need:

```
library(tidyverse)
```

You can keep doing that for as many libraries as you need. I’ve seen notebooks with 10 or more library imports.

6.1 Importing data

The first thing we need to do is get some data to work with. We do that by reading it in. In our case, we’re going to read data from a csv file – a comma-separated values file.

The CSV file we’re going to read from is a Nebraska Game and Parks Commission dataset of confirmed mountain lion sightings in Nebraska. There are, on occasion, fierce debates about mountain lions and if they should be hunted in Nebraska. This dataset can tell us some interesting things about that debate.

So step 1 is to import the data. The code looks something like this, but hold off copying it just yet:

```
mountainlions <- read_csv("~/Documents/Data/mountainlions.csv")

Let’s unpack that.

The first part – mountainlions – is the name of your variable. A variable is just a name of a thing. In this case, our variable is a dataframe, which is R’s way of storing data. We can call this whatever we want. I always want to name dataframes after what is in it. In this case, we’re going to import a dataset of mountain lion sightings from the Nebraska Game and Parks Commission. Variable names, by convention are one word all lower case. You can end a variable with a number, but you can’t start one with a number.

The <- bit, you’ll recall from the basics, is the variable assignment operator. It’s how we know we’re assigning something to a word. Think of the arrow as saying “Take everything on the right of this arrow and stuff it into the thing on the left.” So we’re creating an empty vessel called mountainlions and stuffing all this data into it.

The `read_csv` bits are pretty obvious, except for one thing. What happens in the quote marks is the path to the data. In there, I have to tell R where it will find the data.

The easiest thing to do, if you are confused about how to find your data, is to put your data in the same folder as as your notebook (you’ll have to save that notebook first). If you do that, then you just need to put the name of the file in there (mountainlions.csv).

In my case, the file path I’ve got starts with a ~ character. That’s a shortcut for my home directory. It’s the same on your computer. Your home directory is where your Documents, Desktop and Downloads directories are.

I've got a folder called Documents in my home directory, and in there is a folder called Data that has the file called mountainlions.csv in it. Thus, `~/Documents/Data/mountainlions.csv`

Some people – insane people – leave the data in their downloads folder. The data path then would be `~/Downloads/nameofthedatafilehere.csv` on PC or Mac.

A quick way to find your data file? The tab key. If you start your code `dataframenamehere <- read_csv(")` and after typing the first quote mark you hit tab, it will show you the files in the folder you are in. With that, you can start to narrow in on where you need to go.

So what you put in your import step will be different from mine. Your first task is to import the data. Here's mine. Use the tab key to find your data file and get the correct path.

mountainlions <- read_csv("data/mountainlions.csv")
```

```
Parsed with column specification:
cols(
ID = col_double(),
`Cofirm Type` = col_character(),
COUNTY = col_character(),
Date = col_character()
)
```

Now we can inspect the data we imported. What does it look like? To do that, we use `head(mountainlions)` to show the headers and the first six rows of data. If we wanted to see them all, we could just simply enter `mountainlions` and run it.

To get the number of records in our dataset, we run `nrow(mountainlions)`

head(mountainlions)
```

```
# A tibble: 6 x 4
ID `Cofirm Type` COUNTY      Date
<dbl> <chr>         <chr>    <chr>
1     1 Track         Dawes    9/14/91
2     2 Mortality     Sioux    11/10/91
3     3 Mortality     Scotts Bluff 4/21/96
4     4 Mortality     Sioux     5/9/99
5     5 Mortality     Box Butte  9/29/99
6     6 Track         Scotts Bluff 11/12/99
```

```
nrow(mountainlions)
```

```
[1] 393

6.2 Group by and count

So what if we wanted to know how many mountain lion sightings there were in each county?

To do that by hand, we'd have to take each of the 393 records and sort them into a pile. We'd put them in groups and then count them.

`dplyr` has a group by function in it that does just this. A massive amount of data analysis involves grouping like things together and then doing simple things like counting them, or averaging them together. So it's a good place to start.

So to do this, we'll take our dataset and we'll introduce a new operator: `%>%`. The best way to read that operator, in my opinion, is to interpret that as “and then do this.”

We're going to establish a pattern that will come up again and again throughout this book: `data %>% function`. The first step of every analysis starts with the data being used. Then we apply functions to the data.

In our case, the pattern that you'll use many, many times is: `data %>% group_by(FIELD NAME) %>% summarize(VARIABLE NAME = AGGREGATE FUNCTION(FIELD NAME))`

Here's the code:

```
mountainlions %>% group_by(COUNTY) %>% summarise(
    total = n()
  )
```

```
# A tibble: 42 x 2
COUNTY      total
<chr>      <int>
1 Banner         6
2 Blaine         3
3 Box Butte      4
4 Brown        15
5 Buffalo        3
6 Cedar          1
7 Cherry        30
8 Custer         8
9 Dakota         3
10 Dawes       111
# ... with 32 more rows

So let's walk through that. We start with our dataset – `mountainlions` – and then we tell it to group the data by a given field in the data. In this case, we wanted to group together all the counties, signified by the field name `COUNTY`, which you could get from looking at `head(mountainlions)`. After we group the data, we need to count them up. In `dplyr`, we use `summarize` which can do more than just count things. Inside the parentheses in `summarize`, we set up the summaries we want. In this case, we just want a count of the counties: `total = n()`, says create a new field, called `total` and set it equal to `n()`, which might look weird, but it's common in stats. The number of things in a dataset? Statisticians call it `n`. There are `n` number of incidents in this dataset. So `n()` is a function that counts the number of things there are.

And when we run that, we get a list of counties with a count next to them. But it's not in any order. So we'll add another `And Then Do This %>%` and use `arrange`. `Arrange` does what you think it does – it arranges data in order. By default, it's in ascending order – smallest to largest. But if we want to know the county with the most mountain lion sightings, we need to sort it in descending order. That looks like this:

```
mountainlions %>%
  group_by(COUNTY) %>%
  summarise(
    count = n()
  ) %>% arrange(desc(count))
```

```
# A tibble: 42 x 2
COUNTY      count
<chr>      <int>
1 Dawes        111
2 Sioux         52
3 Sheridan     35
4 Cherry       30
5 Scotts Bluff  26
6 Keya Paha     20
7 Brown        15
8 Rock          11
9 Lincoln       10
10 Custer        8
# ... with 32 more rows
```

We can, if we want, group by more than one thing. So how are these sightings being confirmed? To do that, we can group by `County` and `"Cofirm Type"`, which is how the state misspelled `Confirm`. But note something in this example below:

```
mountainlions %>%
  group_by(COUNTY, `Cofirm Type`) %>% summarise(
    count = n()
  ) %>% arrange(desc(count))
```

```
# A tibble: 93 x 3
# Groups:   COUNTY [42]
COUNTY      `Cofirm Type`      count
<chr>      <chr>          <int>
1 Dawes      Trail Camera Photo    41
2 Sioux      Trail Camera Photo    40
3 Dawes      Track                 19
4 Keya Paha  Trail Camera Photo    18
5 Cherry     Trail Camera Photo    17
6 Dawes      Mortality             17
7 Sheridan   Trail Camera Photo    16
8 Dawes      Photo                 13
9 Dawes      DNA                   11
10 Scotts Bluff Trail Camera Photo    11
# ... with 83 more rows
```

See it? When you have a field name that has two words, `readr` wraps it in back ticks, which is next to the 1 key on your keyboard. You can figure out which fields have back ticks around it by looking at the output of `readr`. Pay attention to that, because it's coming up again in the next section and will be a part of your homework.

6.3 Other aggregates: Mean and median

In the last example, we grouped some data together and counted it up, but there's so much more you can do. You can do multiple measures in a single step as well.

Let's look at some salary data from the University of Nebraska.

salaries <- read_csv("data/nusalaries1819.csv")
```

```
Parsed with column specification:
cols(
Employee = col_character(),
Position = col_character(),
Campus = col_character(),
Department = col_character(),
`Budgeted Annual Salary` = col_number(),
`Salary from State Aided Funds` = col_number(),
`Salary from Other Funds` = col_number()
)
```

```
head(salaries)
```

```
# A tibble: 6 x 7
```

```
Employee Position Campus Department `Budgeted Annual Salary from St-
<chr> <chr> <chr> <chr> <dbl> <dbl>
1 Abbey, ~ Associa~ UNK Kinesiolo~ 61276 61276
2 Abbott,~ Staff S~ UNL FM&P Faci~ 37318 NA
3 Abboud,~ Adminis~ UNMC Surgery-U~ 76400 76400
4 Abdalla~ Asst Pr~ UNMC Pathology~ 74774 71884
5 Abdelka~ Post-Do~ UNMC Surgery-T~ 43516 NA
6 Abdel-M~ Researc~ UNL Public Po~ 58502 NA
# ... with 1 more variable: `Salary from Other Funds` <dbl>
```

In summarize, we can calculate any number of measures. Here, we'll use R's built in mean and median functions to calculate ... well, you get the idea.

```
salaries %>% summarise(
    count = n(),
    mean_salary = mean(`Budgeted Annual Salary`), median_salary = median(`Budgeted Annual Salary`)
  )
```

```
# A tibble: 1 x 3
count mean_salary median_salary
<int>     <dbl>         <dbl>
1 13039     62065.         51343
```

So there's 13,039 employees in the database, spread across four campuses plus the system office. The mean or average salary is about $62,000, but the median salary is slightly more than $51,000.

Why?

Let's let sort help us.

```
salaries %>% arrange(desc(`Budgeted Annual Salary`))
```

```
# A tibble: 13,039 x 7
Employee Position Campus Department `Budgeted Annual Salary from St-
<chr> <chr> <chr> <chr> <dbl> <dbl>

# ... with 13,029 more rows, and 1 more variable: `Salary from Other`
```

```
# Funds` <dbl>

Oh, right. In this dataset, the university pays a football coach $5 million. Extremes influence averages, not medians, and now you have your answer.

So when choosing a measure of the middle, you have to ask yourself – could I have extremes? Because a median won't be sensitive to extremes. It will be the point at which half the numbers are above and half are below. The average or mean will be a measure of the middle, but if you have a bunch of low paid people and then one football coach, the average will be wildly skewed. Here, because there's so few highly paid football coaches compared to people who make a normal salary, the number is only slightly skewed in the grand scheme, but skewed nonetheless.

Chapter 7

Mutating data

One of the most common data analysis techniques is to look at change over time. The most common way of comparing change over time is through percent change. The math behind calculating percent change is very simple, and you should know it off the top of your head. The easy way to remember it is:

$$(\text{new} - \text{old}) / \text{old}$$

Or new minus old divided by old. Your new number minus the old number, the result of which is divided by the old number. To do that in R, we can use `dplyr` and `mutate` to calculate new metrics in a new field using existing fields of data.

So first we'll import the tidyverse so we can read in our data and begin to work with it.

```
```

Now we'll import a common and simple dataset of county population estimates from the US Census Bureau. Each year, the Census Bureau publishes estimates for states and counties. This one has every county in the US. A common question: who are the winners and losers?

```
population <- read_csv('data/countypopulations.csv')
```

```
Parsed with column specification:
cols(
STNAME = col_character(),
CTYNAME = col_character(),
CENSUS2010POP = col_double(),
ESTIMATESBASE2010 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2010 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2011 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2012 = col_double(),
```

```
POPESTIMATE2013 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2014 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2015 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2016 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2017 = col_double(),
POPESTIMATE2018 = col_double()
)

The code to calculate percent change is pretty simple. Remember, with `summarize`, we used `n()` to count things. With `mutate`, we use very similar syntax to calculate a new value – a new column of data – using other values in our dataset. So in this case, we’re trying to do $(\text{new-old})/\text{old}$, but we’re doing it with fields.

If we look at what we got when we imported the data, you’ll see there’s `POPESTIMATE2018` as the new data, and we’ll use `POPESTIMATE2017` as the old data. So we’re looking at one year. Then, to help us, we’ll use `arrange` again to sort it, so we get the fastest growing county over one year.

population %>% mutate(
  change = (POPESTIMATE2018 - POPESTIMATE2017)/POPESTIMATE2017
)
```

```

population %>% mutate(

So who had the most growth last year from the year before? Is everyone moving to Loving County, Texas? Or is it small changes in a small county? Also, note North Dakota showing up twice in the top 10.

7.1 Another use of mutate

Note in our data we have separate State and County name fields. If we were publishing this, we wouldn't want that.

So how can we fix that? Mutate! And a new function to combine text together called `paste`. Paste allows us to merge fields together easily with a separator. In our case, we want to combine the county name and the state name with a comma and a space between them.

```
population %>% mutate(
    change = ((POPESTIMATE2018 - POPESTIMATE2017)/POPESTIMATE2017)*100, location = paste(CTYNAME, STNAME, sep=", ") %>%

Chapter 8

Working with dates

One of the most frustrating things in data is working with dates. Everyone has a different opinion on how to record them, and every software package on the planet has to sort it out. Dealing with it can be a little ... confusing. And every dataset has something new to throw at you. So consider this an introduction.

We're going to do this two ways. First I'm going to show you how to use base R to solve a tricky problem. And then we'll use a library called `lubridate` to solve a more common and less tricky problem. And then we'll use a new library to solve most of the common problems before they start.

8.1 The hard way

First, we'll import `tidyverse` like we always do.

```
library(tidyverse)
```

We're going to use a dataset of parking tickets at UNL. If we do this the old way – using `read.csv` – this is what we get:

```
tickets <- read.csv("data/tickets.csv")
head(tickets)

Note the date is a factor, not a date. We have to fix that. There's a lot of ways to fix dates. The base R way is to use formatting. The code is ... a little odd ... but it's useful to know if you get a really odd date format. What you are doing is essentially parsing the date into it's component parts then reassembling it into a date using formatting.

newtickets <- tickets %>% mutate(
  CleanDate = as.POSIXct(Date, format="%Y-%m-%d %H:%M:%S")
)

head(newtickets)
```

CleanDate is now a special date format that includes times.

You can almost read the code that created it: The format of the date is %Y, which means a four digit year DASH %m or two digit month DASH %d or two digit day SPACE %H or two digit hour COLON %M or two digit minute COLON %S or two digit second. You can remix that as you need. If you had a date that was 20021212 then you would do `format="%Y%m%d"` and so on.

There is a library called lubridate that can parse some common date problems. If it's not already installed, just run `install.packages('lubridate')` library(lubridate)

```

Lubridate can handle this tickets data easier with one of it's many functions. The functions parse dates given a basic pattern. In this case, our data is in a very common pattern of year month date hours minutes seconds. Lubridate has a function called `ymd_hms`.

```
tickets %>% mutate(
  CleanDate = ymd_hms(Date)
)
```

```
Citation      Date      Location

That's less code and less weirdness, so that's good.

But to get clean data, I've installed a library and created a new field so I can now start to work with my dates. That seems like a lot, but don't think your data will always be perfect and you won't have to do these things.

Still, there's got to be a better way. And there is.

Fortunately, `readr` anticipates some date formattings and can automatically handle this (indeed it uses `lubridate` under the hood). The change in your code? You just use `read_csv` instead of `read.csv`

tickets <- read_csv("data/tickets.csv")
```

```
Parsed with column specification:
cols(
Citation = col_double(),
Date = col_datetime(format = ""),
Location = col_character(),
Violation = col_character()
)
```

```
Warning: 104265 parsing failures.
row      col expected  actual      file

```

```
head(tickets)
```

And just like that, the dates are formatted correctly.

But you're not done with lubridate yet. It has some interesting pieces parts we'll use elsewhere.

What's a question you might have about parking tickets on campus involving dates?

How about what month are the most tickets issued? We could use formatting to create a Month field but that would group all the Aprils ever together. We could create a year and a month together, but that would give us an invalid date object and that would create problems later. Lubridate has something called a floor date that we can use.

So to follow along here, we're going to use mutate to create a month field, group by to lump them together, summarize to count them up and arrange to order them. We're just chaining things together.

tickets %>%
  mutate(Month = floor_date(Date, "month")) %>% group_by(Month) %>%
  summarise(total = n()) %>% arrange(desc(total))
```

```
# A tibble: 56 x 2
Month          total
<dtm>          <int>
1 2014-10-01 00:00:00 5177

So the most tickets in this dataset were issued in September of 2014. April of 2015 was second. Then two Septembers and an October.

Any guesses why those months?

I'll give you a hint. It involves 90,000 people gathering in a big building on campus in the fall and one day in April or late March every spring.
