You can almost read that code: The format of the date is %Y, which means a four digit year DASH %m or two digit month DASH %d or two digit day SPACE %H or two digit hour COLON %M or two digit minute COLON %S or two digit second. You can remix that as you need. If you had a date that was 20021212 then you would do `format="%Y%m%d"` and so on.

There is a library called `lubridate` that can parse some common date problems. If it's not already installed, just run `install.packages('lubridate')`

library(lubridate)
```

Lubridate can handle this tickets data easier with one of its many functions. The functions parse dates given a basic pattern. In this case, our data is in a very common pattern of year month date hours minutes seconds. Lubridate has a function called `ymd_hms`.

```
tickets %>% mutate(
  CleanDate = ymd_hms(Date)
)

That's less code and less weirdness, so that's good.

But to get clean data, I've installed a library and created a new field so I can now start to work with my dates. That seems like a lot, but don't think your data will always be perfect and you won't have to do these things.

Still, there's got to be a better way. And there is.

Fortunately, `readr` anticipates some date formattings and can automatically handle this (indeed it uses lubridate under the hood). The change in your code? You just use `read_csv` instead of `read.csv`

tickets <- read_csv("data/tickets.csv")

Parsed with column specification:
cols(
Citation = col_double(),
Date = col_datetime(format = ""),
Location = col_character(),
Violation = col_character()

Warning: 104265 parsing failures.
row      col expected      actual      file
56735 Citation a double T2TEST    'data/tickets.csv'
57050 Citation a double EF0800001 'data/tickets.csv'
57051 Citation a double EF0300004 'data/tickets.csv'
57052 Citation a double EF0300005 'data/tickets.csv'
57053 Citation a double EF010020  'data/tickets.csv'

head(tickets)

# A tibble: 6 x 4
Citation Date              Location      Violation

And just like that, the dates are formatted correctly.

But you're not done with lubridate yet. It has some interesting pieces parts we'll use elsewhere.

What's a question you might have about parking tickets on campus involving dates?

How about what month are the most tickets issued? We could use formatting to create a Month field but that would group all the Aprils ever together. We could create a year and a month together, but that would give us an invalid date object and that would create problems later. Lubridate has something called a floor date that we can use.

So to follow along here, we're going to use mutate to create a month field, group by to lump them together, summarize to count them up and arrange to order them. We're just chaining things together.

tickets %>%
  mutate(Month = floor_date(Date, "month")) %>%
  group_by(Month) %>%
  summarise(total = n()) %>%
  arrange(desc(total))
```

# A tibble: 56 x 2
Month                total
<dtm>                <int>
1 2014-10-01 00:00:00  5177
2 2015-04-01 00:00:00  4913
3 2014-09-01 00:00:00  4645
4 2015-09-01 00:00:00  4541
5 2015-10-01 00:00:00  4403
6 2015-03-01 00:00:00  4392
7 2016-02-01 00:00:00  4314

9 2016-03-01 00:00:00  4194
10 2012-10-01 00:00:00  4173
# ... with 46 more rows
```

So the most tickets in this dataset were issued in September of 2014. April of 2015 was second. Then two Septembers and an October.

Any guesses why those months?

I'll give you a hint. It involves 90,000 people gathering in a big building on campus in the fall and one day in April or late March every spring.
